Excerpt: . . . to a charge of legal perjury, he added: Nor do I charge you that it is legal perjury. 2d. The words charged in the declaration are libellous, and the jury may give exemplary damages if they believe that the defendant intended, and did by their use, impute the crime of legal perjury to the plaintiff. 3d. In all such cases as these, if the jury believe the words charged were published by the defendant, and that the words are in themselves actionable, it is not necessary to prove special damages; the jury may give such damages as they believe, under all the circumstances of the case, would compensate for the injury done to the plaintiff, and inflict such punishment as the law allows to be inflicted upon the defendant. He further charged that, even if a newspaper quarrel was going on, and the plaintiff...
